NEW COUNTY HOME PAGE SHOWCASES BEST OF SAN DIEGO Revamped Web Site Makes it Easy to Find County Services, and Many Other Links

From weddings on the Web to live Web cams of city views, San Diego County residents will easily find what they need on the newly redesigned County Web site.

The site is organized with easy links to the most popular County services. A more powerful search engine will help residents find what they want, even if the service comes under the purview of another government agency. Residents also will have the option of registering on the site, and designing their own County home page, featuring the departments or services they use most.

"Our goal in redesigning the County's home page was to make it as easy as possible for County residents to use," said Michael Moore, County Chief Technology Officer. "We want people to find what they need quickly and easily, with a minimum of searching. Whether it's a permit or a public record, or information on adopting a new pet, you'll be able to find it on the County Web site at www.sdcounty.ca.gov."

Visitors to the County Web site will find all of the traditional County services and departments, arranged in format that's simple to navigate. In addition, they'll find links to other government agencies, whether at the local, state or federal level, and links to everything from sports teams to popular tourist attractions. The site even contains links to Web cams showing off panoramic views of San Diego's scenic vistas.

By creating their own account, residents can modify the information on the Web site to suit their own needs. For example, a teacher can place education links and information on his home page, or a business owner can arrange permit and licensing information on her page.

County services are arranged alphabetically and by category.
